An 'evolutionary psychology' explanation

Ditiwas one of the wives of Sage Kashyapa. Unlike his otherwives, Ditidid not have children. Bhagavata Puranasays that one evening, Diti was overcome with lust and wanted to lie down with Sage Kashyapa. Even though Sage Kashyapa insisted that it was the wrong time of days ince it was dusk and the time for prayers, she was persistent. A reluctant Sage Kashyapa performed the act and went to have a bath at the river. On his return he saw Diti in a repentant mood. Sage Kashyapa realised that since they had the union at the wrong time, their progeny would not have good character. Ditipleaded with Sage Kashyapathatherwicked children be slayed by none other than Lord Narayana himself, the reby giving them salvation.Sage Kashyapa granted her the wish and as a boon he told Dit it hat she would have a grands on who would constantly chant the name of the Lordandwouldbe remembered for time imme morial (SrimadBhagavatam).

The story raises a question: Why did Ditiins ist on having aunion with Sage Kashyapa on that day, While reading an article on evolutionary psychology ("Applications of Evolutionary Psychology in Marketing" in Psychology& Marketing, December 2000) I discovered a potential answer.

First you may want to know what evolutionary psychology is and howit affects human behaviour. Human beings are supposed to be rational and the theory of the Economic Manspoke about how we are alwaystrying to balance what we paywith the utility we derive from any product. Adam Smith, often called the "FatherofEconomics" and "FatherofCapitalism", defined the Economic Man as a person characterised by "self-interested goals and rational choice of means". Behavioural economists question this "rational man" theory. They be lieve that man is anything but rational; we make mistakes, we act impulsively, we take short cuts etc. Nobel Laureate Daniel Kahneman proposed the two-system way of decision making: System1 is where we take decisions quickly without much thought; and System 2 is when we apply all our resources and understanding before making a decision. Behavioural economists tell us that the only way to decode human behaviour is through experiments; if you ask a person, he or she will give you a "rational" answer. But when you subject them to experiments, you will discover the real behaviourpattem. Behavioural economists have created multiple new paradigms to explain human behaviour and these include paradox of choice effe nudgetheory, loss aversion, prospect theory, opt-in

versus opt-out etc. What may be lying under all this could be something that is even more hardwired. Something that has stayed with us overthe millennia. While we Homosapiens emerged from the Savannah plains some 200,000 years ago, according to evolutionary psychologists, we still exhibit traits that we perfected during our life as hunter-gatherers. Characteristics like fight furiously when threatened, or take flight, drive to trade information, share secrets etcare things we have carried with us for generations. Why then is there a universal preference for sweet or fatty foods? Evolutionary psychologists tell us these are adaptive mechanisms that we perfected due to food scarcity. Studies have shown that across cultures, males tend to value physical attractiveness and youth in their mates, while females value financial prospects, ambition and industriousness. Researchers say that in the light of the evolutionary predilections, women probably have a greater concern for appearance in order to increase their mate-value in the eyes of men. Culture and media based social forces accentuate these dispositions and should not be held solely responsible, is another argument. Multi-culture studies have also shown that the most important dimension used by subjects to judge physical attractiveness of females is, hold your breath, waistto-hip ratio. A cross cultures it was found that waist-tohip ratio of 0.7 was judged to be the most appealing (Singh D, Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 1993, 65]. Given the fact that some of the societies covered in this study did not have any form of media, the only explanation, they say, is something that is hardwired in our brain. An article in the Harvard Business Review (Nigel Nicholson, July-August, 1998) pointed out how organisations need to keep evolutionary psychology in mind while formulating organisational behaviour interventions. For example, how do you tap into the "fight or flight" orientation, or how do you capitalise the need to gossip.

Coming to our first question: Why did Diti want to have aunion at that time on that day? Multiple researches have said that women who are near their ovulation period tend to dress more provocatively, we ar more makeup and jewellery. Research has also saidt hat women are more likely to cheat during those periods and may not insist that menuse contraceptives during Diti's desires were fulfilled by Sage Kashyapa and, as they say, the rest is history. We continue to remember her grandson Prahlada. Her intense desires weret riggered not by an instant desire for satisfaction but by something that had been imprinted in herbrain many millennia before. She is not to be blamed, and she was anything but rational at that time.

New-age disruptors in mutual funds

Recent entrants are leveraging technology and low-cost 'passive investing' to attract customers in an industry where market penetration is low

CHIRAG MADIA Mumbai, 7 September

ere is a paradox: Indian asset management companies (AMC) have seen a stupendous rise in their assets under management (AUM) (see chart). However, the penetration of mutual funds (MFs) in India remains far below global averages and emerging market peers such as Brazil and South Korea.

This may change given the rush of new players — those in the financial services business andthose diversifying from other industries — entering the business to tapt he savings of newgeneration investors (see table).

In the past few months, players such as Bajaj Finserv, Zerodha and Samco, among others, have received in-principle approval to start MF businesses. Recently, NJ India also started its MF operations and is all set to launch its first schemes in October, NJ India is one of the biggest MF distributors in the country. In the last few years, MF industries have seen players such as Trust MF and ITI MF starting operations in the asset management business.

New-age players like Zerodha and Samco are established rd of India (Sebi) on a single day.

try to leverage this business to grow their AMCs. Zerodha is among India's largest discount brokers and has a set of existing investors that it can leverage. Bajaj Finserv is, of course, a decades-old financial behemoth with businesses ranging from insurance to lending.
"Each one of them is different in their core competency," said Kaustubh Belapurkar, director-Manager Research, Morningstar India. "For example, Bajaj Finserv has a well-established insurance business and already has a strong customer base in its lending business. So, it brings to the table not only its investment experience but also a ready investor base."

But the new players entering the markets are also likely to take different routes to increase assets. Typically, traditional fund houses have focused on active funds and their own banking channels or distribut or partners forgrowth in business. But new players might leverage technology and bring in simple passive products to gain market share.

For instance, Navi MF, led by Flipkart Co-founder Sachin Bansal, recently filed seven offer documents with market regulator Securities and Exchange Boain stock broking, and they will All those funds are passive in

In June, Navi MF had announced the launch of Navi Nifty 50 Index Fund, an open-endedequity scheme that would replicate the Nifty 50 Index, with a 0.06 percent expense ratio (the annual percentage a fund charges to manage

"New players have technology-based platforms where they have a large base of retail investors. Most of the new players are wellestablished and offer investors low-cost or no-cost products," said Vidya Bala, founding partner & head-Research and Product at PrimeInvestor, an online investing platform. "The passive route gels well with their business model."

Launching passive funds also helps fund houses to save an investment portfolio) being on costs with the added advantage that they will be excluded from Sebi's recently announced rulethat AMCs will now have to invest between 0.03 per cent and 0.13 percent of the scheme corpus based on the risk levels of the individual schemes.

The question, however, is the profits that can be generated by such players since they will be selling low-cost passive products. "In terms of profits, it will be all about economies of scale. Some new players will be focusing only on passive funds where margins are lower compared to grow their assets and reach a wider audience, they can surely make profits," Morningstar's Belapurkar pointed out. But the competition here couldbecome tougher with existing players expanding into passive funds in the past few months — Mirae Asset Management and Nippon Life India AMC being two examples. Market participants believe there is scope for new and old players to profitably co-exist because the low penetration in the MF industry points to a high potential for growth. India's AUM to GDP ratio stands at just 12 per cent against a global average of 63 percent. Even the share of equity AUM to GDP stands at just 5 per cent as against a global average of 30 per cent. Despite this, the Indian MF industry scaled an all-time high of₹35.31 trillion of net AUM as on July 2021 against ₹31.42 trillion at the end of the last fiscal.

In its report on Indian AMCs, financial services firm Jefferies had stated: "Despite being a traditionally higher savings economy, the saving pool has not been channelised towards MFs and India exhibits amongst the lowest metric when compared with global peers. With greater digitisation, rising awareness and push from fund managers, we see potential for higher penetration for MFs and equities."

While the past few years have been good for the AMC industry, the factor to track is whether these new cost-light players will be able to penetrate semi-urban and rural areas and add new long-term investors.

Google-backed edtech firm bets onfree courses

Cuemath is collaborating with state govts and schools in India to pilot its free curriculum-access programme

Cuemath, an online mathcourse provider backed by Google parent Alphabet, is making much of its content free for a year to fend off rivals in India's competitive education-tech market and help fight inequalities in learning.

Its premium curriculum, which normally costs $299 a year, will be free for subscribers who invite two new users. The basic curriculum, with limited access to learning materials, will remain free of charge. The company also Its premium offers programmes curriculum, consisting of live which normally sessions with costs $299 a tutors, starting at year, will be 知6 a class.

that offer online learning modules and classes to students around the world. The industry is growing at a breakneck speed, buoyed by the coronavirus pandemic, and Indian providers are looking to capitalise on the hurdles faced by Chinese contenders whose expansion is being curtailed by their local regulators.

"We want to help boost math basics in the vast majority of the world's children who've had a loss of learning during Covid," Manan Khurma, Cuemath's founder and chief executive officer, said in a video interview. "From ancient times, India has been the land of math and what better than kids around the world learning math from an Indian startup?" The Bengalurubased startup, backed by Sequoia Capital and Alphabet's CapitalG, focuses on a global math-learning market that's estimated at $20 billion, Khurma said, Even with the free offering, Cuemath's revenue is set to reach $100 million in a year ortwo from close to $50 million currently, he said.

The entrepreneur said his early love for math translated into tutoring and by the time he was an engineering student at the Indian Institute of Technology in Delhi he was teaching highschoolers as a hobby. He founded Cuemath, formally called Cuelearn Pvt. in 2013 as an offline company whose tutors taught in their homes, and then quickly pivoted toward online courses. It now offers live math learning via 10,000 tutors. It has about 300,000 students from India as well as the US, Canada, UK and the Middle East who learn math from India-based instructors, mostly women, Cuemath is collaborating with regional governments and schools in India to pilot its free curriculum-access programme. Such moves will save governments around the world billions of dollars, Khurma said. He also called on the broaderedtech industry to consider its responsibility and objectives amid the providers' rapid growth and mega-funding rounds. Their primary goal should be to create learning outcomes," he said.
